Mr. and Mrs. Hartman returned from New York City last week-end where for the past six weeks Mr. Hartman has been hunting bargains for his customers, and he flatters himself that he has succeeded to the utmost. Mr. Hartman is very optimistic and predicts business conditions will again very shortly be back to normal. He says that trade revival was very noticeable during his visit to the metropolis, and he says the main obstacle to normalcy today is the unreasonable freight rates, but he is looking for improvement in this matter before a great while as he says the business men of the north are agitating the matter in a manner that will bring results. If the world was full of optimists of the Hartman type this would be a brighter old world to live in.

Life is just one disappointment after another. We are particularly fond of pumpkin pie, and when H. H. Crow brought something into this office last week visions of our favorite desert floated before our vision. But alas and alack, another disappointment was in store for us. Mr. Crow explained that what he brought was not a pumpkin at all, but a cucumber taken from a vine in his garden. This fruit of the garden tipped the beam at approximately three pounds, and was the largest ever brought to our attention.

Six pretty Dunlay and Quihi girls were on a pleasure trip to Hondo last Saturday and, of course, they also paid the Anvil Herald office a pleasant call.

The young ladies were: Misses Olga Hutzler, Ida Hauser, Emma Breiten, Velma Bohlen, Ella Nienhoefner, Esther Helmke.

Harris thrilled with joy over his wife's vivacity. The strange gloom that oppressed her so much of late had cost him many anxious hours.

So, in high spirits, they planned for their winter. There were long hours, and little diversion, and the desolation of bleak, snow-bound prairies on every side, but through it all they kept up their courage and their hopefulness. Mary spent much time with her needle, from which John, when he felt she was applying herself too closely, begged her to a game of checkers or an hour with one of their few but valued books. And there were frequent visits and long evenings spent about a cozy fire, when the Morrisons, or the Grants, or the Rileys, dropped in to while away the time. The little sod house was warm and snug, and as the men played checkers while the women sewed, what cared the plowmen for the snow and the cold and the wind whistling across the plains?

At last came the crisis. At 4 in the afternoon Harris kissed his wife an affectionate farewell, hitched his horses to the sleigh, and started out post-haste for Plainville. He drove by way of the Morrisons, where a few low words sent Tom to the stable at a trot to hitch his own team, while the good wife bustled about in the room, almost overwhelmed with the importance of her mission.

"I will go for the doctor, Jack, and you go back and take the wife with you," was Morrison's kindly offer, but Harris would not agree. It was dark by this time, and he felt that he could trust no one else to make the journey to Plainville. Besides, there was more than a chance that Dr. Blain might be incapable, and in that case it meant a drive of 30 miles farther.

"It's good of you, Morrison," he said, "but you are more used to your wife's bidding than I am, and you can be of good service there, if you will." And without waiting to argue he sprang into his sleigh again and was whipping his team into the darkness.

"Night, Harris," said the landlord, who had a speaking acquaintance with every settler within 20 miles. "Ye're drivin' late. Ye'll have a bite of supper an' stable the team?"

"No, Hank, not tonight, thanking you the same. But I'm after Dr. Blain, and I'm in a hurry. Is he here, and is he fit?" There was an anxiety in the last words that did not escape the host.

"Nothin' serious, I hope? Frost, or somethin'?" Then, without waiting for reply, he continued: "Yes, doctor's here. Upstairs, bed-to the right as ye go up. Just got in a little back. As for fit—dig 'im out an' judge for yourself."

Harris lost no time scaling the ladder which led to the upper half-story of the building. It was a garret—nothing better—where the cold stars looked through knot holes in the popular shingles, and the ends of the shingle nails were tipped with frost. Another wall lamp burned uncertainly here, flickering in the wind that whistled through the cracks in the gables, and by its light Harris found "the bed to the right." The form of a man lay diagonally across it, face downward, with arms extended above the head, and so still that Harris paused for a moment in a strange alarm. Then he slipped his hand on the doctor's neck and found it warm.

"Come, Doctor," he said, "I want you with me." But the sleeping man answered with not so much as a groan.

"Come, Dr. Blain," Harris repeated, shaking him soundly. "I want you to go home with me." He might have been speaking to the dead.

In sudden exasperation he seized the doctor by the shoulders, and with one heave of his mighty arms set him upright on the floor and shook him vigorously.

Dr. Blain opened his eyes and blinked uncertainly at the light. "Whatche doing, Harris?" he said at length, and the recognition brought a thrill of hope. "No use * * * Gotta sleep it off. 'S no use, Harris. 'S no use." And he crumpled up in the bed.

"But Harris was desperate. "Now I'm not going to fool with you," he said. "You get up and come with me or I'll take you. Which is it?"

But the doctor only mumbled "S no use," and fell heavily to sleep.

Throwing open his coat to get free motion for his arms, Harris in a moment wrapped the sleeping man in a couple of blankets from the bed, threw him over his shoulder, carried him down the rickety ladder, and deposited him, none too gently, in the sleigh. There was a mild cheer from the men about the stove over these heroic measures, and one of them thoughtfully threw the doctor's satchel into the sleigh. The next moment all were lost in the darkness.

Harris drove for an hour, watching the trail keenly in the whitish mist of the winter's night, and urging the horses to the limit of their exertions. He had almost forgotten his passenger when he felt a stir in the bottom of the sleigh. Looking down closely he found the doctor trying to extricate a flask from one of his pockets. With a quick wrench he took it from him, and would have thrown it into the snow, but the thought struck him that it might be needed, and he put it into his own pocket.

The doctor struggled to his feet.

"Watch Doing, Harris?"

"Say, Harris, you're friend o' mine, but don't take too many liberties, see? 'S no use tryin' without it. Jush give me that bottle now, or I'll get out an' go home."

Harris was so pleased at the signs of returning coherence that he could have hugged the doctor, but he only said, "You've had enough for tonight. And you won't get out, because if you try to I'll knock you senseless in the bottom of the sleigh."

After that the doctor remained silent for some time. Then suddenly he demanded: "Shay, Harris, where you takin' me to, anyway?"

"I'm taking you to my home."

"Wha' for? You're all right, I guess * * * Suddenly the doctor stood erect.

"Harris, is your wife sick?"

"That's why I came for you."

"Well, why the devil didn't you say so? Here, give me that whip. Harris, Harris, what did you waste time arguing for?"

"I didn't waste much. The argument was mostly on your side."

"Harris," said the doctor, after a long silence, "you think I'm a fool. You're right. It isn't as though I didn't know. I know the road I'm going, and the end thereof. * * * And yet, in a pinch, I can pull myself together. I'm all right now. But it'll get me again as soon as this is over. * * *

Any good I am, any good I do, is just a bit of salvage out of the wreck. The wreck—yes, it's a good word that—wreck."

Just as the dawn was breaking he knelt beside her. Her eyes were very large and quiet, and her face was white and still. But she raised one pale hand, and the thin fingers fondled in his hair. She drew his face very gently down, and big silent tears stood in his eyes.

"We will call him Allan," he said.

CHAPTER IV.

In the Spell of the Mirage.

A quarter of a century is a short time as world history goes, but it is a considerable era in the life of the Canadian west. More things—momentous things—than can be hinted at in this narrative occurred in the 25 years following the great influx of 1882. The boundless prairie reaches of Manitoba were now comparatively well settled, and the tide of immigration, which, after a dozen years' stagnation, had set in again in greater flood than ever, was now sweeping over the newer lands still farther west. The vast sweep of the horizon, once undefended by any work of man, was pierced and broken with elevators, villages, and farm buildings, and the whiff of coal smoke was blown down the air which had so lately known only the breath of the prairies.

Mary Harris hurried about her spacious kitchen, deep in preparation of the evening meal. The years had taken toll of the freshness of her young beauty; the shoulders, in mute testimony to much hard labor of the hand, had drooped forward over the deepening chest; the hair was thinner, and farther back above the forehead, and streaked with gray at the temples; the mouth lacked the rosy sensuousness of youth, and sat now in a mold, half of resolution, half submission. Yet her foot had lost little of its sprightliness, and the sympathy in her fine eyes seemed to have deepened with the years.

length, and the recognition brought a thrill of hope. "No use * * * Gotta sleep it off. 'S no use, Harris. 'S no use." And he crumpled up in the bed.

"But Harris was desperate. "Now I'm not going to fool with you," he said. "You get up and come with me or I'll take you. Which is it?"

But the doctor only mumbled "S no

Sleep And Daylight Was Always Welcome.

"With the exception of a little milk toast, which comprised my diet for more than eight weeks, I could not eat anything," said Capt. Geo. W. Womble, residing at 105 Jennings St., Knoxville, Tenn., a highly respected citizen of that city.

"I am now able," continued Captain Womble, "after taking two bottles of Tanlac, to eat practically anything. I had a bad form of stomach and intestinal trouble for a long time and for months my condition had been such that I suffered agony. I got so I could not eat the simplest food. I tried doctor after doctor and all kinds of medicine but nothing that was prescribed for me seemed to do me any good. I had a terrible pain in my breast just over my heart and for weeks and weeks I got no relief.

"I finally got so nervous that I actually dreaded to see night come as I could not sleep and was always so restless that I would rejoice to see daylight come. I was also constipated all the time. In fact, life seemed a burden and I was so miserable that I was almost on the verge of despair. Several of my neighbors told me about Tanlac and advised me to try it.

"I am personally acquainted with Mr. Dan M. Chambliss, of the firm of Kuhlman & Chambliss, and when I told him of my condition and how I suffered he advised me to begin taking Tanlac without delay and that it had relieved hundreds of the best people in Knoxville. I have not taken two bottles of Tanlac and am giving you this testimonial in the hope that it may induce others to take it. Since taking this medicine I actually feel like I had been made all over again with the youth, energy and ambition of a sixteen year old boy."

Tanlac is sold in Hondo by W. H. Windrow; in Castroville by Joseph Courand & Co.; and in Dunlap by Louis A. Haby; and by all leading druggists.

certain if the "bone" was all gone meanwhile shielding her face from the steam with the pot lid, held aloft in an aproned hand. Having satisfied herself that the meal was making satisfactory progress, she stepped to the door and sent a quick look across the fields, to where a streak of black smoke was scrawled along the sky.

"Beulah," she called, turning toward the interior part of the house. "Come, Beulah, set the table. They're coming from the field."

In a moment a girl of twenty, plainly attired in a neat calico dress, entered the kitchen. She was fresh and beautiful as her mother had been that first summer in the sod house on the bench, and something in her appearance suggested that with her mother's beauty and fine sensibility she had inherited the indomitable spirit which had made John Harris one of the most prosperous farmers in the district. She moved in an easy, unconscious grace of self-reliance—a reliance that must be just a little irritating to men of old-fashioned notions concerning woman's dependence on the sterner sex—drew the long wooden table, with its covering of white oil cloth, into the center of the kitchen, and began placing the dishes in position.

The scraping of heavy boots on the plow share nailed to the block at the door, and John Harris, followed by Allan and the hired man, Jim, walked into the kitchen. The farmer's frame was heavier than in his younger days and his hair, too, was streaked with gray, but every muscle in his great body seemed to bulge with strength. His face was brown with the prairie sun and wind of 25 summers, and lines of worry and care had cut their tracings about the mouth and eyes. Beside him stood Allan, his only son, straighter and lither of figure, but almost equally powerful. The younger man was, indeed, a replica of the older, and although they had their disagreements, constant association had developed a fine comradeship, and, on the part of the son, a loyalty equal to any strain. The hired man, Jim, was lighter and finer of feature, and his white teeth gleamed against the nut-brown of his face in a quiet smile that refused to be displaced in any emergency, and at times left the beholder in considerable doubt as to the real emotions working behind.

Thos. McCall, carpenter, Hondo, says: "I came down with an attack of kidney trouble. I had such a severe pain that I could hardly stoop over or lift anything. My back pained all the time and made it difficult for me to do my work. I had heard Doan's Kidney Pills highly spoken of so I bought some at Windrow's Drug Store. Doan's helped me right away and two boxes removed the trouble."

Mr. McCall gave the above statement May 29, 1915, and on May 5, 1919, he added: "I have used Doan's Kidney Pills a few times for a slight backache since they cured me four years ago. I think just as much of Doan's as ever."

HARD UP.

You're not hard up when your purse is flat
And your trousers frayed like an old doormat;
You're not hard up when your bills fall due
And you haven't a dollar to see you through;
You're not hard up till you see the day
That you haven't a cheerful word to say.

You're not hard up when your coin is gone
And you whistle a tune as you journey on;
You may walk the streets while others ride
And your pockets have naught but your hands inside;
That's not being broke, you may depend.
For you're not hard up while you have a friend.

But you are hard up and in sorry way
If you haven't a cheerful word to say;
If nothing on earth appeals to you
And you can't see charm in the skies of blue.

And you are hard up if you've reached the end,
And can say in truth that you have no friend.

In dollars and cents don't count your wealth,
But sum it up in good friends and health,
In the little tots that call you "dad,"
Who, when you're coming, are, Oh, so glad.
If you haven't a soul to love or care
You are hard up, though a millionaire.

NONE other indeed is so poor as he who hasn't a cheerful word to give!

WHEN all your chances seem slim
And the way looks dark and grim,
Think of the tortoise that won—
The patient son-of-a-gun!—
And learn a lesson from him!

GOVERNOR Neff has called the legislature to convene in extra session July 18th. In issuing the call he names seven matters that are to be legislated upon. If these subjects receive the deliberation they deserve the legislators will be there long after the heated period is passed. Or will the Governor's aspirations meet an early frost?

THE fairest way to raise the revenue for State expenses is to separate the sources of taxation for State and County purposes, relieving the counties of all State tax, except for public free school purposes, and let the taxes necessary to run the State government be collected from incomes, gross receipts, or sales taxes on large corporations, the profits of which are enormous compared to investments. Each county could then assess its property according to its local needs without detriment to the State. This source of revenue would be abundant and it would relieve the counties of a great burden and would permit them to devote all their time, energies and money to local development, in building better schools, public roads, and generally to aid and develop a better citizenship.—Geo. B. Terrell, Commissioner of Agriculture.

GOVERNOR Harding of the Federal Reserve Banking Board has been down here swinging around the circuit among the cattlemen, presumably to square himself with the boys for the havoc he played with cattle values through his deflation process. If Harding was as badly scared as his picture in the Dallas News seem to indicate, he must have been expecting to be treated like the cowboys used to treat a common cattle rustler. But Harding is no "common" thief; the man who was mainly instrumental in squeezing twenty-five billion dollars of value from property in eighteen months is deserving of more than "common" treatment. How did he do it? Why, some two years ago money was plentiful, credit could be had to finance any enterprise, every body was busy, business was brisk, prices were high and prosperity was every where. Then there went out from Harding and his satellites the word that prices must be deflated. Money became hard to get and prices began to tumble—and you know the rest. Values became deflated by twenty-five billion dollars and debts, which must be paid by commodities, were automatically increased to a like extent. Meantime, the men who started this fearful slump looked on and chuckled and did nothing to stay the ruin their policy was causing. Nero fiddled while Rome burned. But in comparison with Harding, Nero was a piker—a puny one at that!

The Innocent Bystanders

A spirited controversy is being conducted by the Kansas City Packer on one side and the Railway Age and various railway officials on the other, the subject being, "Who Gets the Money?" The money in question is that part of the price paid for fruits and vegetables by the consumer which the producer does not get. Just at this stage of the game the producer and consumer are acting the roll of the innocent bystanders and are the only fellows getting hurt.

The commission houses and wholesalers, represented by the packer, insist that railway rates are excessive and enter largely into the cost of these commodities to consumers. To prove that wholesalers are making very little and oftentimes losing money, a large array of figures are presented. The railroad officials come back with another set of figures showing that the increase in rates adds but a few cents to each article and boldly quote the price the producer gets plus transportation as compared with what the consumers pay. Neither one says anything about the retailer and the peddler. Perhaps this is the chip they will find the bug under. In the meantime the railroads continue to collect their freight and the wholesalers their usual toll, while both producers and consumers pay the bill—Farm and Ranch.

The News Bulletin holds no brief for the retail dealers in perishable products, nor does it essay the role of special pleader of their cause. But it does believe that they are entitled to a square deal.

THE PIONEER DIRECTOR OF TEXAS STATE FARMERS' INSTITUTE WORK

J. W. NEILL.

I stand for—
Community organization and co-operation, for community betterment and uplift.

Economical production—larger yields at lessened cost.

Profitable prices for all the products of the farmers' toil.

J. W. NEILL.

With the farmer complaining—and justly so—at the lack of profitable returns on his crops and with the vast majority of consumers complaining—and justly so—at the high cost of living, all of the toll-taking intermediaries, the distributors, are trying to "stand from under" the onus and place the blame on the other fellow. In this clash of differences the retailer seems in a fair way of being "made the goat" by all the other interested parties.

Let us analyze the situation. The railroads haul the produce from the loading point to the distribution point. For a few hours haul they take their toll in freight charges. The jobbers, commission men, wholesalers, etc., locate for purchase from the grower and place for distribution with the retailers the products, and for this service collect their toll in commissions, profits, etc. They are never in possession of the products long and take very little risk when they know their business. The time and distance between the farmer's field and the retailer's hands is relatively brief and short.

But with the retailer it is different. Once on his hands, it is there to stay until consumption demands it. How long he may have to keep it will depend upon how brisk the demand and how great the supply. It may be soon disposed of or it may remain on his hands long enough to spoil and be a total loss. This possible loss must be insured against. To lessen this danger of loss, expensive storage space and icing must be provided. To reach and attract purchasers, this must be provided in the busiest sections of our most populous centers. This means expensive rentals. Then when sold your modern housewife scorns to shop around for food, but orders "the best you have"—unusually meaning the highest priced—delivered on her kitchen table. This means the maintenance of an expensive delivery service, with its attendant costs of boy hire and the wastage of boy carelessness—gasoline bills, garage bills, etc. When all of these items of expense are taken care of—and they must be or the merchant must go out of business,—when the retailer has placed an order for system by substituting a co-operative fruit or vegetable on his customer's table, the biggest item of cost is the "service" and not the "product". Yet the only way to take care of the expense is through "profits" on the products. All of these things must be taken into consideration when we are disposed to complain of the spread between the producer and the consumer.

And after all, the amount of profit the merchant makes on the products he handles is of no specific concern to the producer. So long as the merchant pays the producer such a price for his products as will afford the producer a reasonable and fair profit over the cost of producing and does not advance the price to the consumer to the point where the consumption will be curtailed and react on the producer in diminished demands, the producer can well afford to leave the size of the retailer's profits to his customers.

When the merchant can not handle a commodity at a profit he eliminates that commodity from his stock, or else he covers that loss with an advance on some other commodity. When the farmer enters the marts of commerce by becoming a producer of commercial commodity, he must do the same as the merchant does—get a profit on his product or quit producing it. When the farmer takes care of this phase of his business, competition in trade will either force an adjustment of profits to an equitable and fair basis or else revolutionize the present commercial the Memoirs of Captain Xavier Wantz, a Noted Indian Fighter of Early Days.

INDIAN DAYS IN MEDINA COUNTY.

Captain Xavier Wantz (pronounced Se-wantz), was born in Strassburg, Germany, in 1844, and came to Texas with his parents as part of Castro's army in 1845. They landed at Port Lavaca, and then came on to Castroville. Mr. Wantz does not of course remember anything of these times, because he was only one year old. His parents settled in Castroville and came fifteen miles west and settled at a place called Vanderburg, four miles north of the present village and settlement of New Fountain. Vanderburg had the old "Wall Road," as it is now called, and which marked the route of General Santa Anna's army after his defeat at Caldwell at the battle of San Jacinto in 1836. At the time of this battle, Mr. Wantz says the route easily traced, and that the Hondo between the rear of the Mexican army and the leader Jack Hays took place about five miles west of the Vanderburg settlement and on the east bank of the Hondo. Mr. Wantz there found broken guns, dishes and other articles of a boy. When the writer visited the site of Old Vanderburg, on the road to see Mr. Wantz, he discovered that the Indians had built nearly hidden in the brush, and the old "Wall Road" was built by Louis American. When the settlers made here the creek then dry, but now Verde, was a drying stream, and derived its name from the many evergreens that grow along its banks and always gave it appearance.

Settlement began prosperously, but once a strange thing happened which caused Vanderburg to decline and the houses which were so carefully and substantially built, to go to decay. This was due to the drying up of Verde creek. It went out, however, four years later, and most of the people left and started another village called it New Fountain, suggesting the new flow of water. A house was built at the old town and later. They were the Wantz brothers, two Decker brothers, Joe Decker, and Louis White. The Wantz family remained a long time, and hauled water from Joe Decker now lives, and Wantz died here.

Very around was open then, Indians were in the habit of the top of White's stone bank for their stock on the hills around.

Wantz was 14 years of age at first Indian scare, and as he expressed it. On that day he went out to hunt muskrats with a sixshooter, and a plenty of deer, fired five of them. He saw no Indians, however, and came back empty pistol and failed to find them. At about 4:00 a. m. the dogs first discovered them and commenced barking, and the horses began to run. Wantz did not think it was safe, and went out in his nightshirt. He followed the trail, thinking mustangs among his horses, or five hundred yards he mounted men driving them, and some of them with guns and shoulders. The Indians descended with his white night garment. Realizing now that they had been turned and fled, his horse vanishing before them in the darkness, carrying him with the one load in his saddle. In the way he came upon the Indians had failed to get, to catch and mount him, but able to do so ran on past his trail to that of Joe Decker to him. He was pursued, and Indians passed the house, turned back and got the horse boy had failed to catch and after their companions. Joe Decker, and the Indians they could not see clearly, discovered an Indian on horseback behind a thicket opposite Wantz. He shouted to the latter, "Look out! There is an Indian behind the thicket!" Wantz now turned his horse and rode around to the lower edge of the thicket; the Indian did the same on the opposite side, but neither saw the other until they met at the end of the thicket. The white man raised his gun quickly, but the Indian was also quick, and wheeled his horse into the brush behind some large bushes about fifty yards away. He learned forward on his horse as he went, and thought he was hit, and partially straightened up. Wantz had his gun on him trying to get a bead as he went, not wanting to waste a shot with a muzzle-loader, but now saw part of the Indian plainly, and taking aim fired. At the crack of the gun the Indian's horse jumped out of sight, and Wantz could not tell if he had hit the Indian or not, but thought he did. Determined to find out where he went, Wantz rode out there to hunt him, keeping his revolver ready for instant use, and soon found him dead under his horse's neck. The Indian was on his hands and knees, with his face to the ground, and his long hair spread out over the grass. He was a fearful-looking sight, and Mr. Wantz said it almost frightened him when he rode upon him, but seeing that he was dead, got down beside him. He was lying on a rope which was around his horse's neck, and had on a pair of leggings and a white man's coat. He also had a dressed buffalo yearling skin with the hair on tied around his waist, which with his own mop of hair, gave him a very bulky appearance. He had shot the Indian squarely through the body, breaking his back. He now took the buffalo skin, bow and quiver of arrows and bow case, and tied them to his own saddle; also the Indian's knife, which had no handle, but a buckskin string closely wrapped around the hand-hold. Mounting he again pursued the Indians to try and recover the horses, which he soon succeeded in doing, as they had abandoned them and gone. The Indian that Wantz killed had evidently stopped behind the thicket to kill him as he came through in pursuit. He returned to the dead body of the Indian he had killed with seventeen head of horses, and found the other two men there. They could not tell where Wantz had gone, but finding the Indian he had killed, remained by the body.

THE above picture shows that one gallon of SWP covers 360 square feet of surface, two coats. Ordinary paint covers from 200 to 250 square feet. That is the first saving. ### Hodge's Body Found on Lonely Road Decomposed.

About the time we went to press last week with News, the body of Adolph Hodge, age 40, was found in the Henry Schneider pasture, about four miles east of town by a searching party. Hodge had been missing since Feb. 18th, when he had quit work for E. M. Lewis, and was paid off, and was last seen, not far from where his scattered remains were found, this week. He had no family and his friends thought he had probably left for other parts of the country, as he sometimes did without saying much about it; but a few days ago Mr. Schneider's boys found a hat and coat in their pasture, which was identified as Hodge's and search was made with result of finding his skeleton, which was easily identified by his clothing and a bone guitar pick which he usually carried. He had something like $15 to $25 the day he disappeared, but not a penny was found in his clothes when the discovery was made. He was about 60 to 70 yards from the road which is seldom traveled, and in the hickory brush. It is believed he was killed for his money. He was reared on the Francisco creek, a few miles from Haas settlement, a son of Oliver Hodge, one of the first settlers of that section, was pretty well educated and had taught school, and was a musician, a colored man that every one respected. He is survived by a brother, Steve Hodge, who is at present in the employ of L. O. Johnson of Lytle. The remains were gathered up and entered Thursday evening in the colored cemetery at Devine. —Devine News.

Says Bacon Had Microscope.

Discovery of ciphered manuscripts crudely illustrated, which are claimed to prove that Roger Bacon, laboring in the dark age of the Thirteenth century, used a high-powered microscope and telescope, instruments generally attributed to Seventeenth-century inventors, was made known, by Dr. Wilfrid M. Voynich, noted bibliographer.

The drawings reveal, he said, that Bacon observed celestial and anatomical objects never before known to have been viewed by human eyes and first known to science 400 years later.

A key to the code used by Bacon to conceal his great work has been found by Dr. William Romaine Newbold of the University of Pennsylvania, and he is now deciphering the manuscript. Doctor Voynich said.

Opossums Instead of Cats.

A writer in a nature publication says: "I kept a pair of opossums in the cellar of my home. One night when all was still I was surprised to hear grunts coming up from the cellar. I had not known that opossums grunted like pigs. These opossums lived in the cellar nearly all winter. I am sure they scared the rats away, as no more rat signs were noticed. I fed them chicken heads, apples, sweet corn, etc."

Scaring 'Em Off.

"What are you going to do about the people who want you to get them positions in the government service?"

"I persuade 'em to think twice," replied Senator Sorghum. "I send 'em copies of speeches made by members of congress who think that workers for the government ought to have their pay reduced at least once every six months."
